The Ordering of Words

Language is a river whose course is shaped by history and habit. In this dictionary we present the Librán tongue in its two forms: the Ancient, ending in -or or -on, and the Modern, rooted in -a, -ë or -ir. Each entry here is a seed: plant it in your speech and watch your world grow.

Words are grouped by domains — clusters of meaning that follow the contours of life: from the core concepts that underlie all thought, through the emotions and states that move us, to the elements, crafts, and colours that paint the world. Some words defy easy shelter; they are gathered at the end, in a cluster without a hearth.

Within each cluster you will find two tables. The Ancient column preserves echoes of our ancestors; the Modern column gives roots from which new forms sprout. Notes will guide you on definiteness (-ë) and plurality (-ir), and mark sacred versus mundane usage. We invite you to wander, to study, and to speak with care.

Core Concepts

The seeds of thought and being. These words root our speech in the most fundamental ideas — life, death, self, nothingness. Use them sparingly and with intention.
